A great example of this is through the leadership of Dr. David L. Mount, who recently received recognition and award from Dr. Maya Angelou, and the National Advisory Executive Co-Chairs, Robert J. Brown, and Eldridge Hanes for personally creating a community service oriented mentoring research lab program for students at the Maya Angelou Center for Health Equity (MACHE). Dr. Mount is especially passionate and committed to further refining, enhancing, and disseminating knowledge about his health professions leadership programs that foster opportunities for recruiting students into the health professions, for continuing to build a critical mass national and internal health equity and health justice ambassadors, and for continuing to enhance and organize sustainable community service projects for students from all backgrounds.
